PHILOSOPHY AND OBJECTIVES

LTC Home Health Care's goals and objectives are based on three fundamental philosophical principles; the belief in the innate worth of the aged and disabled individual, the belief in new life and the nurturing of the new mother and the belief that each individual, regardless of age, sex, race, religion or position in life, is entitled to maximize his/her potential as a human being and a member of society.

The LTC belief is that aging is a normal developmental process, a process often complicated with chronic disease and disability. The needs, feelings and possible contributions of the aging individual may vary in scope, but certainly not in kind from individuals in their prime years of life. The family members of the aging and disabled individual become the benefactor of his or her contributions. At the same time, they usually must bear the burden of their needs.

LTC Home Health Care is dedicated to the nurturing and rehabilitation of the aged, disabled and other individuals needing therapeutic care within the security and comfort of their home, in order that the healing and recuperative process is fostered and the individual may maximize their contribution to their family, and if possible, to society. If recovery or rehabilitation of the individual is not possible, our focus becomes the promotion of integrity for the body, mind and spirit as the individual works through life's final developmental stage.

LTC believes in specializing in quality care for all members of the community in every form of home health care. Our philosophy is to include both the client and his/her family to the fullest extent of their abilities in the planning and implementation of care; also to provide educational and emotional support through the understanding and patience provided during our care.

LTC Home Health Care Objectives:

- To provide the highest quality comprehensive health care service available through a coordinated plan of medical, nursing treatment and everyday living needs to new parents, the ill, aged and disabled residents.
- To provide this type of care for the individual in the security and comfort of their home environment, so that their independence and/or rehabilitative potential is maximized, and their dignity remains intact.

- To provide clients and their families' information and education so they may deal with the stress and changes in their lives caused by life's many experiences.
- To provide a working environment for our employees this stimulates growth and provides excellent nursing care.
- To provide relevant educational opportunities to our nursing personnel so that their knowledge and clinical expertise is enhanced for the benefit of the individual they care for.
